

Questions to ask when finding the right photographer:

How long do you think it will be before you have another portrait taken?

How long do you plan on enjoying these portraits?

Is your decision on what photographer has the right talent, style and delivers high quality portraits or will your decision be on who gives you the cheapest price.

How long of a time frame do you think your baby will have the newborn characteristic? Next thought, do you have enough time to take the chance of not getting beautiful, high quality portraits?

Wouldn't you agree a portrait you really love is priceless? The flip side of that is also true. A portrait you don't like is worthless.

The fact that we charge a little more tells you that you will get the best possible photography and customer service than if you paid less and went to a high volume studio that doesn't care about quality and will most likely just give you a cd of your negatives and hope you have the knowledge on how to retouch and print your images.
